HISTORIC PRESERVATION
PROGRAM

Introduction

The Ozark Historic Preservation Commission received a Historic Preservation Fund grant to conduct a survey of the city's cultural resources within its core historic development area. The results of this survey will help clarify how the city of Ozark developed, and how its architectural heritage expresses and represents the historic development of this typically rugged Ozark mountain town.

The Ozark Historic Preservation Commission is mandated to consider the effects of growth on historic neighborhood preservation, downtown economic viability, and potential downtown abandonment. This survey represents a first step toward such an evaluation by identifying the cultural resources that are significant or representative of the city's historic development. Through documentation of the significance and integrity of these historic structures local government officials, property owners, tourists, and the community as a whole may better understand the value of historic architecture, and subsequently, the wisdom of its preservation and enhancement.

To introduce the intent and scope of the survey to Ozark citizens, an initial public meeting was held in the City Hall on 10 March 1998. The survey plan was presented, with its purpose, procedure, and how it might affect property owners and the community discussed. The final survey results were presented to the public on 01 July 1999 at the regular monthly session of the Ozark Historic Preservation Commission.

Objectives

Historic resources were identified and evaluated for potential eligibility of listing on the National Register of Historic Places. The criteria used in selection for survey initially was based on the Secretary of the Interior's Standards for Evaluation which very generally consists of a fifty-year age requirement, on the historical integrity of each site or structure, and historical significance. The information garnered through the survey will provide a better understanding of the social, economic, cultural trends, and growth patterns associated with the development of Ozark. The survey is an opportunity for the Commission to enhance the community's education and understanding of the benefits of historic preservation in Ozark.

Geographical Survey Boundaries

The city was surveyed in 1835, and land officially offered for homesteading in 1838. A city square was designated in what is known as "old town," and the first lots sold for residential and commercial south of the original. Historic structures and development patterns have been identified using historic plat maps of Ozark, Sanborn Insurance maps, and the literature. The planned layout and development of the city are well illustrated by the extant historic structures and neighborhoods that are the subjects of this survey.

The survey area encompasses the downtown square and neighborhoods radiating for several blocks in all directions from the square, including the Ozark Mill, spillway, and bridge located on the Finley River; and a Prohibition Era gambling "speakeasy." Other sites outside the core development area were considered for inclusion in the survey, but while many are architecturally significant, they were determined to represent developments separate and distinct from the context of the historic city center. These may be recorded as an addendum by the City at later time. Cemeteries were considered in the survey plan, but are not listed in the final because they are of local significance only, and do not merit national significance.

Methodology

Through the study of historical city development plans and field reconnaissance, 221 sites and structures initially were identified for survey and documentation, but 40 buildings or sites were deleted from the final list due to the loss of integrity. The survey was organized into two research components: archival and site investigation. The buildings identified in the initial field study were researched in the city and county archives, and in the literature. They were evaluated and then recorded on survey forms, which includes a photograph of each structure. The current photographic documentation was produced with small format photography. This documentation includes at least one black and white 5X7 print of each structure. Archival data were researched in the following resources:

Tax Assessor records
Sanborn Insurance Maps
Ozark Plat Maps
City and County records

Christian County Historical Society Museum
Christian County Library History Collection

Brief History of Ozark

The city of Ozark is a typical development of pre-Civil War times in the rugged Ozark Mountain region. Its isolation from the larger and more prosperous towns of the Missouri and the Mississippi rivers suited the most independent of pioneers searching for available western land. These were hearty pioneers who migrated primarily from the states of Virginia, Tennessee, Ohio, and Kentucky. They settled along the Finley and James rivers and tributary creeks, preferring the rocky slopes and bottom lands to the grasslands of the Springfield Plateau nearby. There were at least two periods of major migration between the 1830s and the 1850s, and from the post Civil War period through the early to mid-20th century. Before 1830, pioneer settling was sparse and few structural remains exist today.

Ozark settlers primarily made their living by subsistence farming, cattle ranching, and marginal lead and zinc mining. The arrival of the Ozark branch of the St. Louis and San Francisco Railroad in 1882 resulted in increased timber sales for some land owners. Because labor for timber harvesting 1882 resulted in increased timber sales for some land owners. Because labor for timber harvesting was provided primarily by Swedish and Irish immigrants, boarding houses and hotels experienced a booming business during the construction years. It also meant the easy transport of goods in and out of Ozark. Ozark became a departure point for shipping livestock north, and at one time was the largest beef shipping point on the Frisco Railroad system. Later, large amounts of produce such as blackberries, strawberries, and canned tomatoes were distributed out of Ozark on the rail system.

One industry unchanged by the arrival of the railroad was the freight wagon business. The rugged Ozark terrain made train travel slow. A wagon team could make the trek to Springfield in comparable time, and would bring you back in the same day. The train made only one trip per day from Springfield to Ozark. Those who traveled to Springfield on the train, were obligated to stay the night until the next day's train returned.

Ozark was established in 1848 and became the seat of Christian County in 1859. Except the mill and associated businesses along the river, substantial construction in Ozark's center did not take place until after the end of the Civil War. The area around the Ozark Mill represents the first commercial district in Ozark.

After the Civil War, construction increased again, but it was not until the prosperity of the late 1890s that the substantial commercial district developed in downtown Ozark. This construction era continued through the early 1920s. Most of the structures that make up the current commercial downtown, including the Christian County courthouse were constructed during this period. Most of the buildings that make up the current residential neighborhoods in the downtown area were built between the 1890s and the 1930s. Another active historic building era was from post-World War II through 1950.

Mention must be made here about a well-known secret society of Ozark men, the Baldknobbers. This was an infamous group who, nonetheless, contributed to Ozark's history and significance. The Baldknobbers were a post-Civil War vigilante group that took on the cause to restore peace and proper behavior to the community by physically punishing—and always in the dark of night—those who the group believed to have behaved badly. They wrought punishment on those who allegedly mistreated wives, drank, cursed, or committed theft. The Baldknobbers were not mere criminals without strong family or community ties, but were well known citizens of Christian County who were determined to make the area a safe and decent place to live. Their actions, however, soon took on a more criminal element than those upon whom they administered punishment. Their reign of domestic terror culminated with the public hanging of three of its leaders on the Ozark Courthouse Square in 1889. Thousands traveled to this tiny Ozark town to witness the execution, including newspaper reporters from as far away as St. Louis and Kansas City.

Survey Results

The historic development of Ozark is based on subsistence farming in the early years, and eventually with livestock and agricultural farming associated with the convenience of railroad service. Much of Ozark's structural history is typical of a modest agriculturally based community, evident in buildings constructed between mid-1860s and the late 1940s. It developed steadily after the end of the Civil War, benefitted economically, albeit briefly, with the arrival of the railroad, then decades have once again produced steady and substantial growth. An index of buildings follows the end of this report, organized by construction dates.

The structural categories include the following:

- One hundred forty-six (146) residential dwellings;
- Twenty-two (22) commercial buildings located primarily on or near the town square;
- Five (5) industrial buildings;
- Four (4) public buildings;
- Four (4) religious buildings.

The author was hard pressed to find historic buildings possessing high degrees of historical integrity. Generally, if a historic building retained its massing, facade, and its physical elements (footprints) were basically intact, then it was considered a contributing structure to the historic street scape. Artificial siding represents the most serious and widespread integrity issue in historic Ozark. In fact, many buildings listed on the local Register of Historic Places are clad in artificial siding. In such cases, the author deferred to the local Commission's designations. There are some buildings with artificial siding that suffered greater degradation than others. Often, gable ends were embellished with design configurations using the new siding, and this was deemed an unacceptable violation of buildings' historical integrity.

National Register Evaluations

There are at least four individual buildings eligible for National Register status, and they are as follows:

- Christian County Courthouse (Field No. 3-29.1), deemed eligible but never nominated;
- WPA Community Building (Field No. 3-23.1) on the southeast side of the square;
- WPA Public School building (Field No. 3-37.1) on North 4th Avenue;
- Riverside Inn, located two miles north of city center (Field No. 14-0.0.14);
- Ozark Mill (3-2.1), located on North 4th Street on the Finley River.

There are some historic districts within the survey area that might be considered for local and national historic district nomination, and they are as follows:

- Ozark Courthouse Square, including buildings facing the courthouse;
- Farmer and Jackson streets, east from 3rd Street to North 4th Avenue;
- North 2nd Avenue, north from Hall Street to East Farmer Street; and,
- Neighborhood west of South 3rd Street incorporating West Walnut, West Elm, West Church to 9th Street, and North 6th and North 8th streets.

Conclusion

To make more effective use of historic resources, it is necessary to integrate preservation into community planning activities. This survey was designed to provide some needed information for more effective use of the community's resources. This survey will contribute to the preservation efforts of the Ozark community by providing city planners with a detailed listing and description of significant structures and potential historic districts.

The City Historic Preservation Commission may use the survey data to increase public awareness, education, and for listing buildings or districts on the City Historic Register. The survey and inventory information will enhance the Commission's advisory role with the City Planning and Zoning Commission. Planning and Zoning will, in turn, have usable data for more informed and effective planning. The City Tourism Board and the Community Development Authority will use the data to plan and develop Ozark's economic potential based on the most significant historic resources.
